Double-Dip Recession is Great News...Twice the Albacore!

The HEAD MONK announced today that esteemed economists at The University of False Albacorian Monks (with the unfortunate abbreviation of Monk U.), which has been located in the secret caves on the Isle of Harkers since the year 1215 AD, have made an astounding discovery. For almost 1,000 years every world economic crisis resulting in a double-dip recession has also meant TWICE as many albacore in the year of the double dip. The last double-dip event included the recessions of 1980 and 1982. In the Great Depression, the first recession occurred in 1930 followed by the second dip in 1933. In 1812 and 1815 Napoleon Bonaparte's military blunders caused back-to-back recessions that spread from Europe to America.

Economists are now confirming that in addition to the recession beginning in 2008, the world has officially entered a second recession, the feared double dip, in the fall of 2011. Noble Prize winning Monks, Professor Horatio Horsley, Professor Sarah "the Tuninator" Gardner, and Professor Edward "Teach" Thimsen have reviewed the imagery from secret satellites owned by the True Secret Order of False Albacorian Monks. An ecstatic Professor Horsley announced the following on October 3: "A great school of false albacore 20 miles long and eight miles wide is scheduled to surround Cape Lookout the Weekend of November 5, 2011. It is the direct result of the double dip Recession of 2008 and 2011!"

The Noble laureates at Monk U. have determined that when a really bad recession hits, anglers are depressed and fish less, giving fish stocks time to rest and recover. When a "Double Dip" occurs three years later, anglers are then rewarded with at least TWICE as many fish—which makes anglers VERY happy—which causes them to spend money—ending the recession!
