The True Secret Order of False Albacorian Monks
As They Seek to Have the False Albacore Declared
"America's National Fish"
Saturday, November 1, 2014, at 6:30 PM

The True Secret Order of False Albacorian Monks arrived at Cape Lookout in 1482, ten years before Columbus got all the headlines in 1492. In the limestone caves under Harkers Island, the Monks quietly created civilization and fly fishing as we know it...and let others take credit for their discoveries. Did you know that Jefferson and Madison received the first draft of the U.S. Constitution while fishing with the Monks in 1775; that Orville and Wilbur Wright fished for albacore with the Monks the year before their first flight at Kitty Hawk; that Bill Gates fished and studied with the Monks for two years after dropping out of Harvard; and that Steve Jobs, an intern in the Monks' Caves, was given the design for the iPhone and iPad the day after he caught his first albacore on the fly?

Because the Monks believe that their success--and much of the prosperity America enjoys--is in large part due to the presence of False Albacore at Cape Lookout, the Monks ask all Americans to support the False Albacore as "America's National Fish." If a scavenging bird like the Bald Eagle can be American's National Bird, then surely the fabulous False Albacore, the fish that inspired the U.S. Constitution, the airplane, and the greatest inventions of the digital age should be designated our National Fish!

The Monks ask you to support their political action committee--"Albacore PAC-2014." In this time of perpetual gridlock in Congress, this is one idea that can unite America. Send a message to Congress: We want the False Albacore as our National Fish!
