Liberty, Equality, and an Albacore in Every Boat!

In early September in the year 12 A.D., a Roman galley sailed from Egypt toward Rome with a load of books from the great library in Alexandria. The vessel carried Roman soldiers and scholars, and a diverse crew of men and women from many parts of the known world—Europe, Africa, the British Isles, and the Middle East. In the middle of the Mediterranean a monster storm blew the giant ship to the west, past the Rock of Gibraltar, and into the North Atlantic. In October, the crew saw land—Cape Lookout—after a harrowing month at sea! The boat was quickly surrounded by enormous schools of False Albacore that guided them to Harkers Island.

Within days the men and women on the Roman galley established a great underground civilization on Harkers Island, drew up a constitution, declared the False Albacore a catch-and-release game fish, and called for the first election under the principle of a “one person, one vote.” The men and women called themselves the “True Secret Order of False Albacorian Monks” and declared that a new leader be elected on the first Saturday in November every 20 years. This year, 2012, marks two signal events!
